IAEM Awards Committee Chairman Bob Dallmeyer, says "This year, the committee spent considerable time and energy developing an enhanced program which accurately reflects the accomplishments of the individuals in our multifaceted industry. Introducing these awards allows IAEM to recognize a broader representation of the success of those professionals."

The awards presented this year include:

"I am proud of the individuals who will receive these honors at the annual meeting. They are the leaders in the industry, and have proven, through their achievements, that the exhibition industry is stronger and positioned for a future of growth," says IAEM Chairman Dennis Slater.

IAEM's Awards Committee discusses each candidate's qualifications in depth when deciding on who will receive the association's highest honors. The final selection is based on merit. The following individuals will be recognized at IAEM's Annual Meeting, 1-3 December 2004, in San Antonio, Texas.

Rookie of the Year – One Show Manager and One Supplier, recognizes excellent professional performance by an individual with three or less years of full-time exhibition industry experience. Two categories of competition permit the award of a Rookie of the Year for show managers and suppliers. The contributions made by the individuals and their potential impact on the employing organization or the exhibition industry will be considered.

Rookie of the Year – Supplier - ListeNation

The ListeNation team of John Tisdale, Ray Baum, and Eric Morgenson developed a new, innovative, and cost effective approach to direct marketing, which enables show management to communicate with attendees and exhibitors by delivering personal, relevant, and time sensitive messages to their voice mail systems. Several companies and organizations in the industry have used the strategic approach to generate awareness about their own exhibitions including GWSAE, SISO, and TSEA.
